survey measurements in the subsonic speed range For flows wherein no energy is added the point drag coefficient is shown to be an explicit function of the stream Mach number the static pressure coefficient at the wake station and the total pressure loss coefficient Values of the point drag coefficient are tabulated for a wide range of values of these parameters Inasmuch as the tabulated coefficients either drag or thrust represent the point values which are independent of the integration of the wake the charts or tables in the form presented are general in application Report of the Chief of
