Realising REDD+ Arild Angelsen, 2009-01-01 REDD must be transformational REDD requires broad institutional and governance reforms such as tenure decentralisation and corruption control These reforms will enable departures from business as usual and involve communities and forest users in making and implementing policies that affect them Policies must go beyond forestry REDD strategies must include policies outside the forestry sector narrowly defined such as agriculture and energy and better coordinate across sectors to deal with non forest drivers of deforestation and degradation Performance based payments are key yet limited Payments based on performance directly incentivise and compensate forest owners and users But schemes such as payments for environmental services PES depend on conditions such as secure tenure solid carbon data and transparent governance that are often lacking and take time to change This constraint reinforces the need for broad institutional and policy reforms We must learn from the past Many approaches to REDD now being considered are similar to previous efforts to conserve and better manage forests often with limited success Taking on board lessons learned from past experience will improve the prospects of REDD effectiveness National circumstances and uncertainty must be factored in Different country contexts will create a variety of REDD models with different institutional and policy mixes Uncertainties about the shape of the future global REDD system national readiness and political consensus require flexibility and a phased approach to REDD implementation Corrosion and conservation of cultural heritage metallic artefacts J. Monnier, I. Guillot, L. Legrand, P. Dillmann, 2013-07-31 The authors consider the case of iron atmospheric corrosion to illustrate the possibility of developing a conservation diagnosis for a given material in a given environment In the particular case of iron atmospheric corrosion samples from the site of the Amiens Cathedral in the North of France have been characterised in order to identify the different phases constituting the corrosion product layers The layers consist of a matrix of iron oxy hydroxide goethite embedded with several ferrihydrite marblings Other phases such as as lepidocrocite maghemite and akaganeite are present in minor quantities A degradation index is first defined from the phase proportions and from the intrinsic electrochemical properties of those phases Further the electrochemical reactivity of scratched rust powders has been studied to define a second degradation index From these two degradation indices a first step towards a corrosion diagnosis method is proposed Weekly Compilation of Presidential Documents ,2006-12-11 Current
