Evolution and Seismicity of the Mediterranean Region E. Boschi, E. Mantovani, A. Morelli, 2012-12-06 The Mediterranean is one of the most studied regions of the world In spite of this a considerable spread of opinions exists about the geodynamic evolution and the present tectonic setting of this zone The difficulty in recognizing the driving mechanisms of deformation is due to a large extent to the complex distribution in space and time of tectonic events to the high number of parameters involved in this problem and to the scarce possibility of carrying out quantitative estimates of the deformation implied by the various geodynamic hypotheses However we think that a great deal of the present ambiguity could be removed if there were more frequent and open discussions among the scientists who are working on this problem The meeting of ERICE was organized to provide an opportunity in this sense In making this effort we were prompted by the conviction that each step towards the understanding of the Mediterranean evolution is of basic importance both for its scientific consequences and for the possible implications for society It is well known for instance that the knowledge of ongoing tectonic processes in a given region and of their connection with seismic activity may lead to the recognition of middle long term precursors of strong earthquakes The few cases of tentative earthquake prediction in the world occurred where information on large scale seismotectonic behavior was available This led to identify the zones prone to dangerous shocks where observations of short term earthquake precursors were then concentrated

Cities of Vesuvius Michael Grant, 2001 The eruption of Vesuvius in AD 79 buried the cities of Pompeii and Herculaneum beneath a layer of ash and pumice several metres deep The disaster was so swift and so complete that although most of the inhabitants escaped the materials of their daily lives were preserved intact giving us a near perfect representation of what life was like in a Roman provincial town of the first century from the graffiti on the walls to the fruit on the market stalls The classical historian and pre eminent communicator Michael Grant shows us these two cities their arts trades public and private life their squares and temples pubs and brothels after nineteen hundred years frozen in death
