

PRODUCT OVERVIEW

The Marvell® Alaska® 88E3082 and 88E3083 are third-generation Marvell DSP-based 8-port 10/100BASE-T Fast Ethernet (FE) transceivers. They offer the industry's lowest power consumption at only 150mW per port, resulting in higher port density, lower cost FE switches. Additionally, the 88E3082 and 88E3083 integrate the industry's most advanced FE transceiver feature set, such as Marvell's Virtual Cable Tester™ (VCT™) technology for remote cable diagnostics and support for very low power modes.

The Alaska 88E3082 and 88E3083 contain all of the active circuitry to convert data streams to and from eight Media Access Controllers (MACs) and to and from the physical media. In addition, both devices incorporate IEEE 802.3u Auto-Negotiation in support of both 100BASE-TX and 10BASE-T networks over twisted-pair cable in full-duplex or half-duplex mode.

To reduce the number of input/output (I/O) pins between the MAC and the Physical Layer (PHY), the 88E3082 supports the Reduced Media Independent Interface (RMII), the Serial Media Independent Interface (SMII), and the source-synchronous option of SMII (SSSMII). The SSSMII interface extends the allowed PCB trace distance between the PHY and the MAC, thereby facilitating more robust, higher port density FE switch designs. The 88E3083 supports the SMII and SSSMII interfaces.

The 88E3082 also features a mode of operation supporting IEEE-compliant 100BASE-FX fiber-optic networks. The device includes a PECL interface that is selectable on a per-port basis for 100BASE-FX applications. The 88E3083 supports 100BASE-FX fiber on a single port.

Bureau of the Census,1912 Position and Change L. Lindahl,2012-12-06 The present study which I have subtitled A Study in Law and Logic was prompted by the question of whether an investigation into law and legal systems could lead to the discovery of unrevealed fundamental patterns common to all such systems This question was further stimulated by two interrelated problems Firstly could an inquiry be rooted in specifically legal matters as distinct from the more usual writings on deontic logic Secondly could such inquiry yield a theory which would nevertheless embrace a strict and simple logical structure permitting substantive conclusions in legal matters to be deduced from simple rules governing some basic concepts Before the development of deontic logic W N Hohfeld devoted his efforts to this question at the beginning of this century However with this exception few jurists have studied the interrelation between law and logic projected in this way Nevertheless two great names are to be found Gottfried Wilhelm Leibniz and Jeremy Bentham both philosophers with legal as well as logical training Bentham's investigations of logical patterns in law have only recently attracted attention and as for Leibniz his achievements are still almost totally unexplored his most important writings on law and logic have not even been translated from Latin My initial interest in the question was evoked by Professor Stig Kanger Although primarily a logician and philosopher Stig Kanger has been interested also in the fundamentals of legal theory
